Decentring Development: Understanding Change in Agrarian Societies (Anthropology, Change and Development) Tanya Jakimow

The ways we understand processes of agrarian change and intervene in appropriate ways are pressing issues for policy makers and development practitioners. Tanya Jakimow makes a case for 'decentring development', putting aside the predetermined questions, objects of inquiry and expected impacts of development to focus on processes of 'self-becoming'. She takes as a starting point the 'self-in-process', and the different possibilities and foreclosures for self-imagining and self-realization afforded to an individual within a socio-cultural and material environment. The book argues for a political economy of personhood, in which uneven possibilities of self-becoming are considered a critical factor in material relations, as well as an overlooked form of marginalization. Through a comparison of two agrarian societies - Telangana, India, and Central Lombok, Indonesia – the author reveals how transformations to self are critical factors shaping change, as well as under-recognized consequences of development initiatives.
