Amor, el porvenir de una emoción (Spanish Edition) Stascha Rohmer

¿Podemos afirmar hoy, en vista de los avances de la biología y de la ingeniería genética, que el ser humano depende del amor, de amar y de ser amado, del mismo modo en que su naturaleza animal le lleva a depender del alimento físico para poder sobrevivir? ¿Se puede justificar racionalmente la creencia de que, como dijo Erich Fromm, «la humanidad no podría existir ni un solo día sin amor»?

Esta pregunta acerca de la necesidad absoluta de dicho sentimiento, sobre si es constitutivo de la existencia del ser humano como tal y supone por lo tanto una necesidad ontológica, formará el núcleo del presente ensayo. Partiendo de la tesis de que la vida humana es una consecuencia de la interacción de generaciones sucesivas, y recurriendo a la dialéctica hegeliana, Rohmer busca superar la disociación clásica entre naturaleza y espíritu, por un lado, y entre naturaleza y cultura, por otro, y argumenta que la esencia de la existencia humana es la libertad, enraizada en un tipo de amor que trasciende lo corpóreo y lo sensual.
